

ALZHEIMER'S

RESEARCH

emerge

Worried About Your Memory?

If you or someone you know are concerned about memory loss or Alzheimer's disease, you may be eligible for a clinical study called EMERGE. The EMERGE study will assess the safety and potential efficacy of an investigational medication to determine whether it can slow the progression of symptoms in early Alzheimer's disease, such as memory loss.

In order to qualify you must:

- be between 50-85 years of age
- be experiencing symptoms that might be related to early Alzheimer's disease, such as problems with memory or thinking clearly

Additional eligibility requirements can be found by searching clinicaltrials.gov.

Qualified participants will receive all study-related care and medication at no cost. Compensation may be provided for time and travel. Health insurance is not needed.

To learn more call: